TALK OF THE TOWN

Enquirer EXTRA asked readers last Sunday to call in their answers to this question.

Q: Should loved ones of the terminally ill be prosecuted for mercy killings or assisting with suicide?

Here are excerpts of some of the responses.

Someone to help someone do something like this is very wrong.
Martha Thompson, Mount Healthy

I have a understanding that under the law a law such a killing would be classified as murder. The law should be changed to make it a less stringent category and also a separate category for assisted suicide. If the assisted suicide is definitely requested, then there should be no prosecution.
Ralph Perkinson, Springdale

Loved ones should be prosecuted for mercy killings when assisting with suicides. A person that is dying should have a right to stay here as long as they can hang on, and a loved one should not get involved in their killing or help them commit suicide. I had a terminally ill mother last year, and she lingered. I didn't try to interfere with her dying. She died of cancer.
Ann Lewis, Lockland

It's not a yes or a no answer when something is done with love. It's something that has to be looked at. Has medicine gone too far in prolonging life? When you have an 85-year-old person and it's time to go, then it's between those two people and God.
Cindy Markwell, West Chester

Assisted suicide should be prosecuted. They're opening the door for people to begin to kill people who are dying. It's getting tired of taking care of them. There's a fine line between somebody doing something because it's a mercy killing and wanting to alleviate themselves of all the burden. Perhaps, they're worried about the estate being used up in medical expenses and so forth. Besides that, the sanctity of human life is sacred and something that we shouldn't be violating like we are.
Kim Bush, Pleasant Ridge

No, loved ones of terminally ill should not be prosecuted for mercy killings or assisting with suicides. A society we have forgotten what quality of life means. Because we're able to keep people alive through artificial means whether it be medicine or

Girls, boys get the hang of ropes course

ABOVE: Elmwood Elementary School 10-year-olds Brian Ward, left, and Tyler Haungs, on ladder, put into practice lessons they learned at a Safe Adventures Ropes Course in Clermont County's Patton Park. Fourth and fifth grade students learned the ropes skills in the last of a three-part Patchwork Collaborative Project last week, designed to help girls become more confident in math and science skills. Follow-up discussions in the classroom center on stereotyping and traditional roles of men and women.

males, we seem to have this never-ending need to keep life going at all costs and without any quality whatsoever.

Laure Finbom-Jempster, Indian Hill

no one has the right to take the life of another no matter how compassionate or merciful it may seem to the loved one of the terminally ill. They should be prosecuted. I also wonder who might be put out of misery, the loved one or the terminally ill?
Antia Bolce, Walnut Hills

This cannot apply to every case. It has to be individually thought out and taken care of. It can't be just a blanket right. Until you've lived with someone with a terminal illness or someone that's in the final stages of Alzheimers, you can't understand what that person is going through. People are under the false impression that assisted suicide or mercy killing is for the benefit of the people left behind. If you've lived with anyone like this, you'd know that it's for the benefit of the person suffering.
Ruth Loom, East End

Loved ones should not be prosecuted for mercy killings or assisting with suicides. Nowadays, the medical community is putting too much emphasis on preserving life that may not necessarily be worth preserving. It should be the person's wish that should be taken into consideration if they're terminally ill.
Kris Czerwinski, Mount Lookout
